

Dear ESAM Members,

it was with great pleasure that I accepted the offer to run for the position as the new Treasurer of ESAM. I would be honoured to expand my scope of responsibilities within the ESAM family and support aerospace medicine in Europe in a new field of action.

I have been working as ESAM's Administrative Assistant for 1,5 years now and correspondingly worked hand in hand with the departing Treasurer as well as most of ESAM's current and future committee members. As my presence within ESAM fell regrettably together with the COVID-19 pandemic and I am now looking forward to a team working environment that allows more personal and less online interchange of projects and ideas.

Besides, I am an Anaesthesiologist at the University Hospital Leipzig, Germany. My research interests focus on both Aerospace Medicine and Emergency Medicine, especially under extreme environmental conditions. Thereby, I am a proud member of the corresponding research group of the Department of Anaesthesiology and Intensive Care Medicine at the University Hospital Cologne, Germany.

As for Aerospace Medicine ESAM is a unique collaboration of experts and friends that share the same professional interests. Working here is always characterized by effort out of conviction and appreciation and I hope to have gained your trust and votes to continue supporting the society.

Yours sincerely,

Felix Liebold
